Tourism BOOM in Portugal

This year, Portugal's travel and tourism industries are expected to account for a fifth of its economy. Despite shortages of housing for workers, the tourism industry is expected to create almost a million jobs. It is proving profitable for homeowners providing short term lets or overnight stays to cater for the significant influx of tourists; or investors providing staff accommodation to ease the housing shortages in popular areas including Lisbon, Porto and the Algarve. The other reason tourists are flocking to Portugal is the fact that they are exploring the option of moving to Portugal because Portugal's passport is renowned for being the fifth most powerful passport in the world, where you have direct access to 187 countries. compared to the first most powerful passport, Singapore, providing direct access to 190 countries.

While Portugal's housing prices have slowed down recently (at last!), this could be advantageous if you are looking to purchase or invest in properties in Portugal. The National Statistics Institute (INE) has recorded an exceptionally high increase in purchase and sale of properties in 2022. It's no surprise that our small and mighty team is on hand to happily help clients realise their Portugal dream...on an average of once a week!
